

Pretextual/textual activity or affective turbulence/morphology over the threshold of subjectivities

To engage in an activity that is intrinsically extractive/influential despite an initial inclination opposite to that which the activity inculcates?

the subject of initial inclination/perspective appropriatively posits the impending perspectival change as merely a step toward the initial goal, yet, once this perspectival shift sufficiently affects this obstinate subject, the initial perspective organically morphs into the final, felt by the subject as a sort of necessary detour (or evil) in order to attain the initial end, yet this shift inevitably, by shifting the very subjectivity of the subject, renders the initial goal sclerotic/obsolete/undesired, etc, placing the ~~old~~ subject in pursuit of a new goal in keeping with the new subjectivity.

It seems this can only be effectively engaged in once a rhetorical/antithetical equivocation has been achieved, or some heuristic thereof. In other words, the subject must have already transcended an otherwise automatic adherence to their "natural" subjectivity.
